Managing Your (MY) Transition

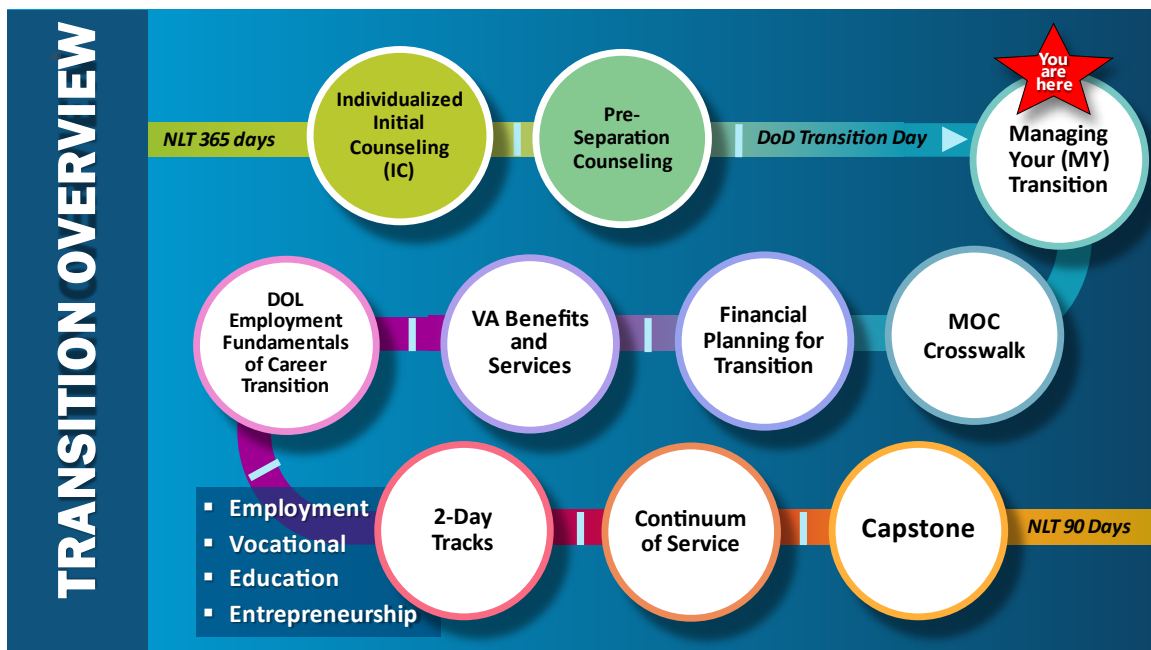

Transition Overview

Preparation for transition occurs at various touchpoints of your military career as part of the Military Life Cycle (MLC) career preparation. These touchpoints include the following:

- First Permanent Duty Station (Active) or first Home Station/Initial Drilling Weekend (Reserve)
- Re-enlistment
- Promotion
- Deployment and Redeployment/Mobilization and Demobilization/Deactivation
- Change of Duty Station
- Major Life Events
- Separation, Retirement, or Release from Active Duty

During these touchpoints, you implemented your Individual Development Plan (IDP) that ultimately became your Individual Transition Plan (ITP).

The final touchpoint is addressed by the Transition Assistance Program (TAP). TAP includes multiple steps, beginning with Individualized Initial Counseling (IC) and ending with a Capstone event (see graphic below). Throughout the process, an outcome-based curriculum reinforces what was covered during your MLC and finalizes preparations for your civilian career.

The goal of TAP is to assist you in meeting the Department of Defense’s (DoD) Career Readiness Standards (CRS). CRS are measurable outcomes that indicate your preparedness to meet your transition goals and must be completed before your Capstone meeting. Successfully completing your assigned CRS will help ease your transition into the civilian sector.

Consider the following statistics from the U.S. Census Bureau:

- .5% of the U.S. adult population is serving on active duty
- 17% of the U.S. population were veterans in 1990
- 7% of the U.S. adult population were veterans in 2021

Given how few U.S. citizens are or have been part of the military, most potential employers in the civilian sector will likely be unfamiliar with military culture. Therefore, it is critical for you to be able to translate your skills and experiences into language that employers will be able to understand. TAP curriculum is designed to help you accomplish this goal.

The following charts provide descriptions of the TAP courses and their associated CRS. Required CRS are determined by Tier assignment and must be completed before attending your Capstone appointment.

Managing Your (MY) Transition Timeline

Ideally, Service members should begin TAP 24 months before retirement or 18 months before separation. However, if these start dates are not possible, please note that it is mandatory that all Service members begin TAP no later than 365 days prior to their transition.

To assist you in planning your transition, an interactive MY Transition Timeline is available to download at <https://www.dodtap.mil/> in the Transition Services section.

*Members of the Reserve Component being demobilized/deactivated at a time that makes the 365-day requirement unfeasible will begin Individualized Initial Counseling and the Self-Assessment/ITP as soon as possible within the remaining period of Service.

MY Transition

This transition course discusses common concerns that may occur during transition and covers some less obvious topics—loss of purpose and identity, new stressors that may result during transition and strategies to manage them, differences in the culture of civilian and military life, the value of a mentor and how to obtain one, and resources available during and after transition. These issues may have a significant impact on the transition process and need to be considered in your ITP.

Course Objectives

Upon completion of this course, you will be able to:

- Identify transition concerns.
- Describe loss of purpose and identity; explore ways to redefine them.
- Implement various strategies to mitigate transition stress.
- Compare cultural differences between military and civilian life.
- Recognize the value of a mentor and identify methods to obtain one.
- Identify reliable resources available during and after transition.

Transition Concerns

It is normal for you to have concerns about life after the military while going through the transition process. Navigating a lifestyle change can be challenging for anyone. There are two kinds of transitions:

- Planned—Includes retirement, separation, or leaving active-duty to return to a civilian career; a transition that was either expected or chosen through a conscious, thoughtful, decision-making process.
- Unplanned—Involves medical issues or involuntary separation; could be more stressful since it is not your choice; you may not have time to mentally process or plan for your transition.

Regardless of the type of transition, there are a great number of unknowns. To start thinking and planning for transition, list your transition concerns.

ACTIVITY: What are your transition concerns?

Below is a list of common concerns identified by TAP counselors and transitioning Service members during previous TAP courses:

- Feeling a loss of purpose/identity
- Getting and keeping the right job
- Being successfully in college
- Creating a fallback plan
- Going into debt
- Surviving in a new environment
- Finding work-life balance
- Not being "in charge" anymore
- Medically unable to work
- Moving or relocating self/family
- Spending more time with family
- Having enough money
- Paycheck not guaranteed
- Paying more in taxes
- Earning less leave at a civilian job
- Losing the military support system
- Moving children away from friends
- Putting children in new schools
- Cost of a new wardrobe
- Employment for spouse
- Getting VA Benefits
- Obtaining/paying for healthcare
- Finding affordable housing
- Interaction with extended family
- Returning to civilian life
- Changing roles/expectations

Were your concerns listed?

Does knowing that others have some of the same concerns as you relieve some of the pressure?

What changes are you looking forward to after transition?

Finding New Purpose and Identity

When transitioning, many Service members look forward to leaving behind the structure and rules of the military. However, veterans who have transitioned mention the lack of structure – along with the loss of purpose and identity – as their most difficult adjustment.

When you joined the military, you became part of a group with a defined structure and clear-cut rules and norms. You ate together, lived together, and trained together. Although you may not have liked everyone, you developed a level of trust and understanding that you would defend each other. Under the direction of supervisors and with peers and mentors, you likely shared what may have been challenging experiences and formed a close-knit tribe that helped you engage in the mission and endure long periods of time away from home.

Sebastian Junger, an author, filmmaker, and journalist who was deployed in Afghanistan, popularized viewing the military as a tribe—a concept supported by many psychologists who work with veterans and Service members.

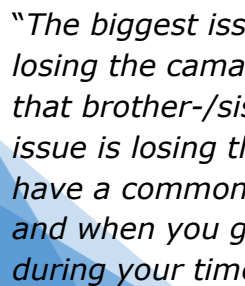

Junger defines “tribe” as the community in which you live—where you share resources and defend each other. He suggests that the loss of this tribe (i.e., the military) is at the root of many difficulties experienced by veterans.

LOSS OF PURPOSE AND IDENTITY

In VA’s Post-Separation Transition Assistance Program Assessment (PSTAP) Revised 2021 Cross-sectional Survey Report, over 51% of veterans reported “missing the camaraderie and teamwork that was part of the military culture” as the most challenging aspect of transition.

In contrast to joining the military, transitioning back into the civilian sector tends to be more complex as it usually happens individually rather than in a group. It is common for veterans to report feeling uncertain and isolated after losing the military structure and close social networks. At the same time, you may have difficulty reconnecting with family and friends who have not served in the military and may not fully understand your experiences.

One veteran described it this way:

"The biggest issue Service members encounter when they get out is losing the camaraderie that comes with being in the military. They lose that brother-/sister-in-arms family connection. The second biggest issue is losing their sense of purpose. When you're in the military, you have a common mission that's shared with your brothers and sisters, and when you get out, that purpose and the identity you carved out during your time in the Service is gone."

--Medically Discharged NCO

Finding a new purpose and identity after leaving military Service involves building a new tribe. Note that online resources and activities can help you find others who share your interests and concerns. However, in-person interactions are optimum in building that same connection you had during your military Service.

Below are some ways to help you find your new purpose:

- Take time for self-reflection and research to find your new purpose. Explore your interests, abilities, and values by registering for the DOL Career and Credentialing Exploration (C2E) course through your TAP office. Be patient—purpose usually evolves over time and will require you to be open to change.
- Seek meaningful employment with a mission you fully support. While a paycheck is necessary, finding a job with a purpose you believe in and co-workers who share your passion will lead to greater job satisfaction. If your job doesn't provide the level of purpose you experienced in the military, explore other options below.
- Join veteran- and military-related groups that exhibit many of the same characteristics as military Service—close knit groups with equal opportunities and rights for all and the expectation that you will contribute to the cause.
- Seek opportunities in your community where you can use your skills as a member of a larger group to further a cause important to you. Visit <https://americorps.gov/> to view a list of national service opportunities.

It's very important to remember that you are not alone during this transition. In addition to the support of your family and friends, there are personnel, agencies, and organizations that are ready to help you. The last section of this guide contains information about these advisors and the additional courses available to assist you during your transition out of the military.

Resiliency in Transition

Even with preparation, some aspects of your transition will be stressful. However, in the military, you have been trained to be resilient to help mitigate stress. The coping skills you learned will be critical during this time of change.

Resiliency is defined as the process of adapting well in the face of change, adversity, or significant sources of stress—such as family and relationship problems, health issues, and workplace or financial stressors.

It is the ability to respond appropriately to these stressors and “bounce back” from difficult experiences. Resilience is not a trait that some people have and others don’t. It involves behaviors, thoughts, and actions that can be learned and developed by anyone.

As you learned in your previous MLC training, being resilient means:

- Being realistic
- Turning challenges into opportunities
- Learning from adversity
- Preparing for challenging situations

(Source: American Psychological Association)

The same resiliency skills you used to face challenges and overcome obstacles in your military career will serve you well as you transition out of the military and into the civilian sector. While the military often emphasizes self-reliance, asking for help builds resiliency.

Now consider the following questions:

- What changes do you expect to experience during transition?
- If you have a family, what changes might they experience?
- Have you considered what new stress might result from all the changes and how you will handle it?

Realistically, many changes will occur during transition, and the stressors may be different from those you experienced during your military Service. Now is the time to apply what you have learned during resiliency training to your transition. This will support you in a successful transition into the civilian sector.

Managing Transition Stress

Stress due to transitioning out of the military can be both positive and negative.

- Positive Stress—short-term motivator to increase energy and focus to help you set goals and achieve tasks to prepare for transition.
- Negative Stress—cause of psychological distress that manifests in an adverse physical manner.

Signs of negative transition stress include:

- irritability
- changes in appetite
- changes in sleep patterns
- headaches
- depression
- isolation
- decreased communication
- use of alcohol/drugs
- anxiety
- frustration
- helplessness
- apathy

If you recognize these behaviors and feelings in yourself or those close to you mention that you seem stressed, it is possible to reduce stress levels by applying certain strategies.

ACTIVITY: Review the following list and place a check next to your preferred methods for managing stress. Also, think about other stress management techniques you have used during your military career and add them in the space provided at the end of the list.

WAYS TO RELIEVE STRESS
Eat well, drink water	Skipping meals, excessive alcohol intake, and overuse of energy drinks can interfere with your body's ability to function well and cope with stress.
Get rest	Sleep is important to help your body repair itself. Experts recommend seven to nine hours of sleep per night.
Exercise	Physical activity releases endorphins, clears your head, and releases muscle tension.
Maintain a schedule	Build time for work, play, family time, and spiritual needs.
Set goals and move toward them	Document your goals and the steps necessary to achieve them to help organize your transition and build your confidence.
Break tasks down and delegate	Break large tasks into smaller pieces and share or delegate, if possible.
List and let go	Write out a list of tasks and assign a priority to get a visual perspective and free up your mind.
Ask for help/accept help	Reach out to mentors, friends, other transitioning Service members, and Service-related organizations for help.
Acknowledge and accept your feelings	Acknowledge the changes and accept the related feelings.
Embrace change	Build change stamina by being open to small changes in your daily life in preparation for the more dramatic changes that occur during transition.
Surround yourself with positivity	Being around those who are positive makes you more likely to adopt a positive attitude.
Take breaks	Engage in an activity you enjoy...or just relax.
Listen to music	Listen to slow-paced music to relax or rock out to your favorites.
Breathe/meditate	Concentrate on your breathing to slow your thoughts and help you feel more relaxed.
Laugh	Watch a funny show or stand-up routine. Laughing brings more oxygen into your body/organs and relaxes your muscles.
Communicate	Share information, thoughts, and feelings with co-workers, friends, and family members to reduce misunderstandings and tension.

WAYS TO RELIEVE STRESS
	Have fun	Use free concerts, hiking/biking, game nights, watching movies, camping, talking, and attending community activities with others to decompress.

One strategy not included in the list is to plan and prepare for transition. Military members and their families are taught to have multiple contingency plans. Military training focuses on planning and preparation to control the situation and outcome. During transition, there will be situations that you cannot control. Trying to do so will increase the stress and tension. Having multiple plans in place is an excellent way to reduce transition stress.

Even with careful planning, circumstances can take an unexpected turn. Having the ability to adapt is vitally important. Being open to new experiences, adopting a growth mindset, and embracing the challenge of new beginnings are the keys to remaining resilient. We call this last way to relieve stress: BEING FLEXIBLE. Flexibility for you and your family will be critical to a successful transition.

Military vs. Civilian Culture

Part of your early military training was learning about the military culture and rules. In the same way, as you move into the civilian workforce, you will need to adapt to a different environment by understanding a new set of rules and expectations. These rules are rarely written or verbally expressed. However, knowing what to expect and finding a civilian culture that is a good fit for you will increase your chances of success in your next endeavor.

The following chart lists some of the differences you might experience when moving from the military into the civilian sector. Differences found specifically in employment will be discussed in DOL Employment Fundamentals of Career Transition. Education differences will be covered in DoD Managing Your (MY) Education.

TOPICS	MILITARY	CIVILIAN
Personal Choice	Military Service determines location, job duties, and length of duty assignment.	Individual chooses location and type of work and can usually leave a position at any time.
Attire	Uniforms—clear guidelines on what to wear.	Usually less restrictive with more chance for choice; may have dress code but it may not be enforced evenly; some professions may require a uniform.
Pay	Able to see/know what everyone else makes; pay raises are standardized.	Private-sector jobs rarely publicize salaries; starting salaries and pay raises may vary widely among employees; discussions about salary are discouraged.
Work/Life Balance	Duty hours are not clearly defined; mission needs may require working weekends, evenings, and overtime without prior notice; leave may be denied or canceled to meet mission requirements.	Work hours may vary between positions, but usually limited to 5 days/week and 8 hours/day; overtime pay or time off for extra hours worked unless a salaried position; more opportunities to balance family and work obligations.
Housing	Base housing/BAH (for off-base housing) determined by rank; may be required to keep certain standards.	Usually free to choose any housing although some jobs may require you to live close to your work; Homeowner's Association (HOA) rules/fees may apply.
Starting Over	Start a new job with each assignment but keep rank and pay.	May take a lower position and pay cut when changing fields or positions; salary not based on what you were paid in the past.
Service to Country	Citizens respond with "thank you for your Service."	Most jobs do not have the thanks of the nation.

MILITARY VS. CIVILIAN CULTURE
TOPICS	MILITARY	CIVILIAN
We vs. I	Part of a cohesive group where the unit's goals are placed above personal goals; individuals may earn awards, but accomplishments are frequently described using "we" to emphasize the team effort.	May work with a team, but individuals are expected to highlight their personal contributions and use "I" during job interviews and performance reviews.
Peer Interaction	Social circle is formed easily as most Service members have common experiences/ interests; not unusual to socialize with co-workers.	Individual must initiate efforts to find friends with common experiences/ interests; some civilians are reluctant to socialize with co-workers.
Mission/Purpose	Overall mission is clearly defined and embraced by all; individually, incentives for serving may vary.	Overarching mission may not be well defined or discussed.
Rank/Respect	Position in the hierarchy is known by wearing rank on uniform; respected, in part, because of rank.	Position in the hierarchy may be unknown or unclear initially; accomplishments, work ethic, and how you treat others earn respect.
Language-Written	Close communications with "Very Respectfully" or "V/R."	Close communications with "Best regards" or "Sincerely;" "Very Respectfully" may be used in some government agencies.
Language-Verbal	Military-specific acronyms and jargon; use of sir/ma'am or superior's rank/name. Profanity and culturally insensitive language may be used among personnel of similar rank.	Industry-specific acronyms; no military jargon; use of sir/ma'am varies depending on geographic location but is used less often or even discouraged; first names used frequently. Avoid using any profanity and culturally insensitive language regarding race, religion, politics, and gender.

Are there any other topics not listed? If so, add them below.

Which changes do you see as being the most significant? Why?

From the list of topics, which ones do you think will be the easiest to adapt to and will cause the least amount of stress? Why?

Understanding cultural differences is important in any setting, but especially when starting a new job or enrolling in a training program or institution of higher education. Your goal as a newly transitioned Service member is to “fit in and stand out.” You fit in by following the unwritten rules and stand out by having the experience, education, credentials, and attitude desired; doing your job well; and getting along with others.

Value of Mentors

Another key component of transition is the willingness to ask for and accept help from others. This can be achieved by obtaining a mentor who can offer advice and support during and after transition.

Most Service members have experienced mentoring during their military Service and can name at least one person who has been influential in their personal or professional life. This same type of support through mentorship is even more valuable as you transition. Ideally, you should find a mentor who has navigated the military-to-civilian transition experience and is willing to share what was learned during the process.

Good mentors display the following characteristics:

- Assist in setting goals and priorities and staying on task.
- Serve as a resource and a sounding board.
- Give specific, constructive feedback to improve behavior, but never attack character or personality.
- Remain supportive and encouraging, even in difficult situations.
- Demonstrate success in their lives and are well respected in their organizations and in their communities.

To find a mentor:

- Seek out a trusted counselor, teacher, or influential senior sponsor—preferably someone already employed in your desired field or your new location.
- Utilize your existing military network—consider asking past supervisors or peers who have already transitioned out of the military or are further along in the transition process.
- Use social media (especially LinkedIn) to find industry-specific mentors by connecting with former military members who are working in your career field of interest.
- Explore Military and Veteran Service Organizations (MSO/VSO) as they often have members willing to mentor others. Use the National Resource Directory website at <https://www.nrd.gov> to locate programs and services that support wounded warriors, Service members, veterans, their families, and caregivers.

Once you find a mentor, be open, respectful, flexible, and eager to learn. Most of all, be committed to adapting as you gain information so you can transition successfully.
